

SUCCESS STORY

Virtual Internship Programme

Jennifer Knowles

Research & Marketing Virtual Intern, Ecoexist, India

Jennifer took part in The University of Birmingham's innovative Virtual Internship Programme from March 2017- May 2017.

Jennifer worked with three other UoB Interns, along with three interns from Swinburne University in Australia to support a social enterprise, Ecoexist, in India, re on a conservation project around the use of plastic bags.

Skills & Experience Developed

The virtual internship is a fantastic opportunity to develop a wide array of transferrable skills – such as team working, project management, and communication skills – and gain an in-depth insight into international as well as virtual working.

My advice to future interns would be to get stuck in, get involved as much as you can and really make the most of your experience!

“There really is no other internship programme like it in the UK, and so being reflective on your experiences can really help you stand out from the crowd when it comes to job applications and interviews”

www.birmingham.ac.uk/virtuainternships

www.intranet.birmingham.ac.uk/careers

@careersbham

/careersbham